“ Pam was the oldest sibling followed by me. We are only 18 months apart. She was always there from my earliest memories. She was loving and caring for all her younger siblings. Loved everyone, helping any she could. We had a rough life coming up, but we were always there for each other and taking care of our 4 younger siblings. Yes, we would argue when kids, however, never once when we were grown did I hear her say or do anything bad to others. She was a wonderful wife, mother, grandmother, daughter, and sister.

The Bible tells us. “a virtuous woman’s children will rise up and call her blessed.” This was my sweet sister. She was truly a blessing, to all that God put in her path. My heart breaks for her home going. However, I know she is with Jesus, her husband, daddy and all our family. I would not want her to suffer here on earth. We prayed for a miraculous healing for her the night before she went home. We prayed that the next day, she would be healed. Well, our father in heaven did heal her the next day. Not the way we wanted, we wanted her to stay here with us. However, he did give her the ultimate healing. He reached down in love, took her hand, and wrapped her in his arms of love, and escorted her home. Not our will, but his, as Jesus prayed in the garden of Gethsemane, “not my will father, but yours...” Yes, we grieve, but Pam and all the saints rejoice at her homecoming. I’ve known her longer than any but our mother, she gave love, and she still does give love, only now, she loves us all from her new home. Furthermore, she knows the perfect love of Jesus, up close and personal. Oh what singing, oh what shouting! Until we meet again Pam, I always have and always will love you! You are a great sister and friend. You will be missed, but one day.....oh what shouting, oh what singing! God blesses me with you as my sister, and I thank and praise him for the love that he and you gave, and give me now. My tears flow, not for you, but for my separation from you, but, I know you are as happy, blessed, and fully experiencing wonders and love not known here on earth. I know you will be there for me one day, just as you were always here for me. You will be waiting to greet, embrace, and love me, up close and personal, as you have for the last 56 years. I love you so much, my heart aches, but I know Jesus will carry me through this storm, just as he has carried me all the days of my life. I give my burden to him each day to carry, for I know, I am weak but he is strong! Love is eternal, as are we, we will love each other forever, a short time away from each other, but one day.....thank you for loving me as you have.....thank you for the memories, like the time we were arguing and you threw the fork at me and it actually stuck in my upper arm. Lol. It didn’t hurt, but, I was shocked that it actually stuck. Lol. Love you to infinity!
